

How good is your defence?

Electronic communication is an essential business enabler, but without adequate security and proper control over the messages your business sends and receives it can also become a business disabler.

Proprietary solutions against this can be expensive to implement, but there is another way...

Email can be a weak link in your security system, often thanks to the risk of human error when people open up rogue messages. Implementing software protection can be costly, however, Imerja has developed a cost effective solution to this problem, providing peace of mind that your business network is protected.

Imerjamail is an email security service that uses a combination of commercially available and open-source applications to block 98 per cent of all spam, including viruses, Trojans, worms, unsolicited marketing and phishing messages.

Processing is moved out of the corporate network which considerably reduces bandwidth and resource costs.

Its open-source capability and unique point scoring system applied to each scanned email means that it constantly evolves and adapts to identify and block the latest threats. It provides flexible criteria to set thresholds to allow, block or quarantine messages, giving you full control.

As a complement to this service email archiving enables businesses to retain an auditable record of all email messages sent and received. In addition, emergency email access provides email services via a web browser, offering immediate access to business email communications in the event of the corporate mail server not being available for any reason, such as office fire, flood or other catastrophic event.

With email archiving also in place the emergency email service will provide immediate access to archived messages.

When incorporated into an overall business IT strategy the Imerjamail service suite offers a cost effective element to a business disaster recovery and business continuity solution.

However, the real benefit is that we keep it up to date and move all of the processing outside of corporate networks – reducing bandwidth requirements and resource overheads involved in administering your corporate email system.
